

Military Student Bill of Rights

All military student populations have basic rights to satisfactory postsecondary school marketing, admissions and student services practices including the right to:

- Accurate information about the school's programs, requirements, accreditation, and its potential impact on course transferability.
- Access basic program information and fees without disclosure of student personal information.
- Educational planning and career guidance without high-pressure registration and enrollment efforts from institutions.
- A clear and complete explanation of course/program enrollment procedures and all resulting financial obligations.
- Explore, without coercion, all financial aid options before signing up for student loans or other financial assistance.
- Accurate scholarship information, free of misleading scholarship offers based on military tuition assistance.
- Appropriate, accessible academic and student support services.
- Clearly defined institutional withdrawal policies and procedures including information about the impact of military duties (e.g., mobilization, activation, temporary duty assignments) on their academic standing and financial responsibilities.
- Clearly defined grievance/appeals processes.
